Why Cite? Whether you’re taking information from a book, article or website, the purpose of citing the source is:
- to credit the author and publisher of the information you are using
- to show that your work has a factual basis
- to provide a bibliography so that others can locate the references you used
- to avoid plagiarizing (using someone else’s words or ideas without citing them)

Below are some examples of how to cite your sources. For more information see the MLA Style Manual and Guide to Scholarly Publishing 3rd Edition (most recent), REF PN 147.G444 2008. For in-text format (parenthetical documentation) see pages 240-260 in the MLA Style Manual and Guide. Recommended website for additional examples: http://dianahacker.com/resdoc/

Examples for citing sources in MLA format

- Book: Printed form (see pp. 186-189 in MLA Handbook)

- Book: Electronic form (see pp. 216 in MLA Handbook)

- Book: If available in both Electronic or Print form (see pp. 216 in MLA Handbook)

- Article from full-text database (pp. 220-221 in MLA Handbook)

- Article in a reference book (see pp. 193-194 in MLA Handbook)

- Work in an anthology (see pp. 190-191 in MLA Handbook)

- Article in a scholarly journal (see p. 175-177 in MLA Handbook)

- Magazine article (see pp. 180-181 in MLA Handbook (in print, not electronic))

*If pages are interrupted by advertisements, use “60+” instead.

- Newspaper article (see pp. 178-179 in MLA Handbook)

- Article from an online journal (not in a database) (see pp. 218-220 in MLA Handbook)

 If no page numbers are present, use “n.pag.” instead.

- Web Site (see pp. 214-216 in MLA Handbook)

For examples of a Works Cited page, see MLA Style Manual and Guide p. 168-173 or go to http://dianahacker.com/pdfs/Hacker-Daly-MLA-WC.pdf