THE WILLIS BARNSTONE TRANSLATION PRIZE

$1,000 for a Translated Poem
Final Judge: Willis Barnstone

This award is named in honor of the distinguished American poet and translator Willis Barnstone, and we're delighted that he's agreed to serve as the final judge for our 2015 competition.

Complete Guidelines for Submission: The competition welcomes submissions of unpublished translations of poems from any language and time period -- ancient to contemporary. The length limit for each translation is 200 hundred lines. Please staple the translation to a copy of the original which identifies the original poet, and put the name, address, and phone number of the translator (or translators) on the back of the translation page. Also, since entries will not be returned, please include an SASE if you wish to be notified of the contest results.

Please note: There is a limit of ten submissions for each translator. Also, translations of poems for which the translator has not secured the rights-to-publish are eligible for the contest, but only translations of poems in the public domain or with the rights secured can be considered for publication in The Evansville Review.

Entry Fee: $5 for the first poem; $3 for each subsequent poem. Please make checks payable to The University of Evansville.

Postmark Deadline: December 1, 2015. Please send translations to:
